Since 2007 the Romanesque Road in Saxony-Anhalt is part of the European Cultural Route

TRANSROMANICA. TRANSROMANICA combines the common cultural heritage of the Romanesque period across eight European countries. The historical evidence of this era can be found in Germany, Austria, Portugal, Spain, France, Italy, Serbia and Rumania. In these countries, the new art and architecture, emerging all over Europe in the end of the 10th century, evolved with great complexity. Follow this impressive route and be guided along the interpretation of symbols, treasuries and images. The Merseburg Incantations (10th entury) are kept in the chapterhouse of the Merseburg Cathedral. The Merseburg cathedral is known beyond the borders of Saxony-Anhalt because of the restored cathedral organ of Friedrich Ladegast from year 1855. With its 5687 pipes, it is considered to be one of the largest and most romantic organs of Central Germany.
